The Westchester County Grand Jury which has been investigating the alleged irregularities in the matter of registrations and naturalizations in this county, after a thorough and patient examination of a large number of witnesses, finished its work yesterday afternoon, and filed the following report

the County Clerk's office:

We, the Grand Jury of the county of Westbester, in pursuance of a recommendation made the County Judge, have investigated the manrs, methods and practices of the various courts in their officials empowered with the authority actice of some judges of such courts to instruct anilmous opinion of this Grand Jury that such actice is morally wrong, and it is also the Grand Jurors here assembled that the praces above stated are detrimental to good morals in citizenship, and they should henceforth and

The poorest of these negroes are extremely polite to one another, as well as to strangers. It is amusing to see a balf-naked fellow, hatless and shoeless, bowing low to another in the same condition, and hear him say with the air of a Chestericid.

amusing to see a half-naked fellow, intless and shoeless, bowing low to another in the same condition, and hear him say with the air of a Chesterfield:

Hod do dis morn, sar? Hope um do be well, sar? The response invariably is: "Quite well, um, di morn, sar, tank um, sar." The word "um" is not understoed, but its use is constant in every sentence, and "sar" or "marn-lady" is never omitted. Seeing women breaking stone on the roadside, coaling shints in the harbor, working in the tieds and doing all the business of marketing, you wonder what the men do for a fixing. It is not true that the men are altogether idle, though the women perform most of the labor which calls for strength and cudurance. The colored 'lords of creation' in this part of the world are willing to be dressed up in the becoming uniform of soliters and glory in the gorgeous tunic, scarlet Jacket and blue zonave breeches of harbarie being committed under his nose. One finds native men on the railroads, too, apparently enjoying the free rides as conductors and engineers; also as toingraph operators, glass-diamond bedecked clerks in shops and holes, and overseers of the so-called "weaker sax" who are breaking stone and digging ditches.

To tell the truth, the Amazonians look better able to do hard work than the lanky, undersized men. The blackest and brawniest of them challenge admiration when met on the road, huge burdens halanced on their heads, loose garments tucked high around the hins, arms swinging, siriding along with the graceful motion which freedom obody and limb alone can give. With vigorous arms they beliabor the poor little donkeys, laden from ears to tall with Guinea grass for its own dinner and a variety of articles, animate and manimate, either of purense or for sale. The spiendid roads, which are the pride and boast of the iviance, were originally built by convers, and the vork of keeping them in repeals is not difficult. You soon cease to feel pity for the females who ner obing it when you observe how contented, even hitarious, th

INCLINED PLANES FOR CANALBOATS.

From The Birmingham Post.

In many cases where canal communication is required to pass over an elevation, such for instance, as to connect the Danube with the North Sea, ordinary locks involve great delay as well as expense, while the first cost of hydraulic lifts, which are used instead of locks in some places, is considerable. An alternative scheme has recently been proposed by Herr Vetor Schönbach—the use of an inclined plane, which is virtually a form of ship railway. At a point where such a "lift" is required the two sections of the canal run parallel to each other, one being at a higher level, while the inclined plane runs at right angles to them. The canal-barge is carried in a tankcar, which must necessarily, with its contained water, form a great weight. A special system of roller-bearings is devised to insure the approximate equal distribution of the weight, while motion is obtained electrically, the motors acting by a train of gearing on a rackrall. It is obvious that each lift might be provided with a double track, so that the weights of a descending boat and an ascending boat might nearly counterbalance cannother. The cost in the case of ordinary canals, such as our own in England, is in favor of the old lock system, but it works out that as the height to be lifted increases the inclined plane becomes relatively cheaper, until for heights of eighty yards and upward the inclined plane has the advantage.

WILLIAM F. RANDEL DISBARRED.

FOUND GUILTY ON CHARGES OF DECEIT AND

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court handed down a decision of the Saprena con-tion to disbar William F. Randel. The motion to disbar was made by George C. Holt, counsel for the Bar Association, upon charges of decelt and malpractice. The specific charge was that Randel, in June, 1855, as attorney for John Magdalinski, received from the Sheriff of Kings County $1,408 21 for the mortuage, which Randel told him was gilt-diged, but $1,8821 was all that was recovered at the sale.

The referee Charles H. Russell, finds that Randel had wrongfully concealed the fact that he had col-lected the amount, $1,48821, and the Appellate Di-tision grants the motion to dishar and orders that had wrongfully concealed the fact that he had col-lected the amount, $1.4821, and the Appellate Di-vision grants the motion to disbar and orders that the referee's fees be made a county charge.

Justice Freedman, in the Supreme Court, yesterday handed down a decision granting to District-Attorney Gardiner a writ of peremptory mandamits to compel Magistrate Willard H. Oimsted to permit an inspection and examination demanded, and a refusal on Magistrate of the District-Attorney to the inspection and examination demanded, and a refusal on Magistrate of the District-Attorney arcses out of the latter's demand to inspect the depositions and informations upon which warrants were issued in Hegal reclustration cases brought up by depuny State superincendents of election. Maxistrate Oimsted asked for time to consult with his brother Magistrates before complying with the request. Justice Freedman says however that if the District-Attorney had the right to an immediate inspection and examination, the exercise of that right could not be lawfully prevented by starting a judicial inquiry as to its existence.
